Social collaboration with a residential feel

Transitioning from consulting to digital marketing, their workplace transforms into an innovation hub

A leading professional services firm, through mergers and acquisitions, has brought new ways of working with their evolution from a traditional consulting firm to a technology focused organization, guiding their clients through complex digital transformations. With new teams joining forces, tension arose between different types of employees being co-located. Veering away from global standards, this regional headquarters was transformed, making the office a destination for employees and clients with an innovation lab to test models with clients.

A free address workplace strategy provides employees a variety of choices to work throughout the day. From focus spaces and shared private offices, to huddle, meeting rooms and breakaway areas, some of the most coveted spots offer solitude with power, laptop tables and expansive views of Boston. As an international hub, the design aesthetic has a Boston Brahmin vibe – blending traditional with contemporary. The sophisticated color palette, fabrics, textures and finishes create an elegant atmosphere for hosting their semi-annual global investor meetings.
